Course Description:

The proposed trip seeks to bring key areas of circumatlantic studies—colonialism, post-colonialism, the sugar plantation, slavery and emancipation, tourism and eco-tourism, environmental challenges, Creole societies and languages—into greater focus by exploring the specificities of local responses to global movements. Through the study of the complexities of these three Caribbean societies, students would have the opportunity to question seemingly fixed categories such as “colonialism” or “the plantation” or still ambivalent categories like “eco-tourism” through the prism of specific cultures and histories. The underlying purpose of the trip is to demonstrate how the colonization of the Caribbean islands, spaces where self-containment has often led to varied and idiosyncratic cultures, has produced myriad forms of colonialism and of post-colonial societies that can hardly be subsumed by one singular term.

Class Dynamics:

Classes will be based on dialogue, open discussion and specific student questions. Lectures will be provided occasionally to guide and inform discussion of particular concepts or texts but will not substitute for student participation. Therefore students are responsible for coming to class prepared, having read and/or viewed assigned materials, and ready to comment on them. Students are responsible for bringing to our attention any problems they may encounter during the semester. This includes issues of comprehension, individual assignments or other concerns that may affect student performance.
Required Work:

Students are required to submit two papers and make two presentations as follows:

1. A five-page/proposal that discusses the topic/theme you are planning to research while on the trip.
2. A 4-minute presentation on your project before the trip.
3. A ten-page final paper on the topic/theme selected, due on May 1st.

If, in the course of writing any of the required work you should make use of the ideas or wording of a consulted source, you must provide documentation to that effect following the guidelines established in the MLA Handbook or Chicago Manual of Style. If you are unclear as to what requires documentation, consult the Manual, the pamphlet on Originality and Attribution: A Guide for Student Writers at Vassar College, or myself. Failure to acknowledge sources constitutes a breach of academic integrity and will be referred to the College’s Academic Panel. This applies equally to material taken from the worldwide web.

Attendance Policy:

Attendance to class meetings is obligatory. Absence from class will not constitute a valid excuse for lack of preparation or late work. Students can keep abreast of course assignments through Blackboard or though contact with fellow students or the instructor. After the third unexcused absence from class, subsequent absences will result in a corresponding reduction of the final grade (see below).

Students with Disabilities

Academic accommodations are available for students with disabilities who are registered with the Office of Disability and Support Services. Please schedule an appointment with the instructor early in the semester to discuss any accommodations for this course which have been approved by the Director of Disability and Support Services as indicated in your DSS accommodation letter.
